Dear Chris,

I am writing in support of Freedom Housing, and your innovative models of disability housing solutions.

As a professional who has worked within the disability sector for eight years, I am well aware of the chronic lack of suitable, affordable, and family centred, disability housing.

Housing is one of the biggest concerns for ageing families who care for a loved one with a disability. This is because for many years there has been a lack of flexible housing models, one's that provide solutions to families who require support, but who may also want to continue caring for their family member with a disability.

My experience has taught me that not one size fits all. I encourage and I support a variety of appropriate housing models for those with disabilities, to ensure that choice, dignity, and inclusion, is achieved.

Over the past 12 months I have had many conversations with you about Freedom Housing, and it is clear that the Freedom Housing model has been created with the utmost respect for those with disabilities, their families, and the vastly varying supports required.

Regards,
